

WORLD SOCIETY OF PERSON-CENTERED MEDICINE (WSPCM)

Nomination for Honorary Fellowship

To the Board of the World Society of Person-Centered Medicine,

It is with great respect and admiration that I nominate Professor Vincenzo Di Nicola for the Honorary Fellowship of the World Society of Person-Centered Medicine in recognition of his outstanding and sustained contributions to psychiatry, family therapy, child and adolescent mental health, and the theoretical and practical advancement of person-centered care.

Rationale

Professor Di Nicola's work bridges rigorous clinical scholarship with a humane, ethically grounded vision of care that places the person and family at the center of clinical reasoning and public health. His scholarship integrates developmental, relational, cultural, and spiritual dimensions of human life, offering a coherent alternative to reductionist models and providing a robust intellectual foundation for person-centered medicine.

Scholarly Contributions

- Interdisciplinary theory building Professor Di Nicola has advanced integrative frameworks that connect clinical psychiatry, family systems theory, developmental psychopathology, and cultural psychiatry, enriching our understanding of how persons and families experience and respond to illness.
- Clinical research and innovation His empirical and conceptual work on trauma, migration, family resilience, and youth mental health has informed evidence-based interventions and prevention strategies that respect individual meaning and social context.
- Publications and thought leadership Through influential books, peer-reviewed articles, and edited volumes, Professor Di Nicola has shaped international discourse on mental health, narrative approaches to care, and the ethical responsibilities of clinicians.

Clinical, Educational, and Policy Impact

- Transforming clinical practice Professor Di Nicola's emphasis on relational assessment, narrative competence, and culturally attuned interventions has improved clinical outcomes and patient experience across diverse settings.
- Medical education and training He has been instrumental in training clinicians to adopt person-centered methods—teaching skills in listening, contextual formulation, and collaborative care that prepare practitioners to address complexity with compassion.
- Policy and advocacy His contributions extend to public health and policy arenas, where he has advocated for systems that prioritize prevention, family support, and the social determinants of mental health.

Global Leadership and Service

Professor Di Nicola's international collaborations, mentorship of emerging scholars, and leadership in professional societies have amplified the reach of person-centered principles worldwide. His work with multidisciplinary teams and community partners exemplifies the Society's mission to integrate science, ethics, and human dignity in health care.

Conclusion and Recommendation

For his exceptional scholarship, his transformative influence on clinical practice and education, and his unwavering commitment to a humane, relational, and ethically grounded medicine, I am honored to nominate Professor Vincenzo Di Nicola for the Honorary Fellowship of the World Society of Person-Centered Medicine.
