Getting to Sorrento

Sorrento is located 50 km south of Naples and can be reached by train, bus, car, or ferry. It takes about an hour to travel between Naples and Sorrento.

By bus: The Curreri bus departs from the Naples Capodichino airport terminal and arrives in Sorrento in a little over an hour. You can purchase your ticket on board for €10. The bus stop is opposite the airport arrivals gate; buses arrive about ten minutes before every scheduled departure and there is ample space for luggage on board. Sit on the right side to enjoy the beautiful views of the Sorrentine peninsula along the way.

How can I get to Sorrento at night? The last bus from the Naples airport to Sorrento departs at 7:30pm. If your flight arrives after that time, your only alternative is to reach Sorrento by private transfer or taxi.

By taxi or private transfer:

it is the most comfortable and quick solution: We recommend booking a transfer rather than taking a taxi, as you will have a driver waiting to meet you when your flight lands and is cheaper than taxi. The cost is around 130€ for 1-3 people and 150€ for 4-7 people with minivan.

By train:

From Naples station you can reach Sorrento by local train "Circumvesuviana". The station is downstairs. This line runs from Naples to Sorrento, and tickets cost less than €4. The ride lasts about 1 hour and 10 minutes, with several stops along the way. Sorrento is the last stop along the line. The Circumvesuviana may be get very crowded, and you may not find seating.

By sea

One of the most scenic and relaxing ways to reach Sorrento is by ferry from Naples. The Naples - Sorrento line is active all year long, and the routes depart from the Molo Beverello pier. You can reach the Naples port via the Alibus bus route which leaves from the Naples' Capodichino Airport. The high-speed ferry takes 40 minutes and tickets cost around €12, plus a baggage fee of €2 per bag. Routes may be suspended if seas are rough.

To get from the port of Sorrento to the center of town, you need to climb a switchback road or about 100 steps. There are buses and taxis that will take you uphill from the port.

See timetable and book on Alilauro website.

From Rome to Sorrento by Bus

If you are travelling to Sorrento from Rome, you can also opt to take the Marozzi bus. The trip takes about 4 hours, but you are guaranteed a seat, there is space for storing luggage, and you don't have to change. Buses depart each day from the Roma Tiburtina train station at 7am and 3pm.

By car

Getting to Sorrento by car is easy... the traffic is the hard part! From Highway A3 Napoli - Pompei - Sorrento, exit at Castellammare di Stabia and continue straight following the signs to "Sorrento".

Traffic

One of Sorrento's chronic problems is the traffic that can back up along the highway SS 145 from Castellammare to Sorrento. Days and times in which you will probably run into heavy traffic are the weekends, summer months, and holidays like Easter, 25 April, and 1 May.

Parking

There is no free parking in Sorrento, but booking our apartment you have free car parking for one car.

Around Sorrento

Sorrento is often used as a base to visit the nearby Positano and Amalfi Coast, Pompeii, Vesuvio, Herculaneum and Capri Island... so it's important to know how to get around.

The center of Sorrento is quite small and can be easily explored on foot in one day. The areas around Marina Piccola and Marina Grande are located downhill from the center, so it's more convenient to take a bus to get up the hillside, or you can use the elevator located in Marina Grande Positano and Amalfi coast. By bus, by car, by boat or by excursion.

By bus: Sita buses link Sorrento to Positano, Amalfi, and the other towns along the Amalfi Coast. The terminal for Sita buses is located at the Circumvesuviana station in Sorrento. If possible, it's best to board the bus here since it will be easier to find a seat, especially near the window. There is a ticket booth for purchasing bus tickets. You can purchase either a single ride or a daily pass. The ride between Sorrento and Amalfi is quite long (over an hour) and the road is very curvy. In summer, the bus can be crowded and there can be heavy traffic along the road. Keep this in mind if you suffer from motion sickness!

By Car:

Driving is an excellent way to explore many areas of Italy's Amalfi Coast Peninsula that are not well-served by public transportation, including the rolling countryside. You can also easily drive to Positano (there is rarely traffic along the road between Sorrento and Positano), as long as you are willing to pay at least €4/hour for parking. We do not recommend driving to Pompeii or Naples, however, as it is much faster to go by train.

By boat :

Ferries depart from Sorrento to Capri and all year long. During the summer, there are also routes to Capri, Ischia, Procida and the Positano and Amalfi Coast. Travelling by ferry is by far the most comfortable and convenient way to visit the area surrounding Sorrento, with the only drawback being the relatively high ticket prices. There are also a number of ferry companies that organize boat tours and mini-Cruises. You can buy also a ticket (Metrò del Mare) valid for the whole day and get on and get off as you prefer (Positano, Amalfi, etc.)

Circumvesuviana Trains

The Circumvesuviana is the local rail line that links various towns in the province of Naples. It is a commuter line, much like a subway in a large city, except it is above ground. There is limited seating and you can't reserve a seat. Circumvesuviana trains generally run on time and this is the best way to get to Pompeii or Ercolano from Sorrento. Since there is no traffic, the journey takes less than 30 minutes, and the Pompei Villa dei Misteri stop is directly across from the entrance to Pompeii ruins. From Pompei is easy to reach the vulcano Vesuvio.

Thypical Days in Sorrento:

Day 1

Discover the town of Sorrento by following our one-day itinerary.

Day 2

If you are spending a few days in Sorrento, a day trip to Capri is a must. See Day trip to Capri from Sorrento by boat or excursion.

Day 3
